

Battleground Teddy boy

Hayley vows:
I'll be back

ROCK 'N' ROLL King Bill Haley, 51, wants to give a free concert for disappointed fans following riots at a theatre.

His manager, Mr. Patrick Malynn, said last night: "We would do the show somewhere like one of the big London parks next summer."

Trouble started on Friday night when Teddy boys, in drain-pipe trousers, tried to invade the stage at the New Victoria Theatre, London.

BACKFIRE HITS SEX PISTOLS

THE Sex Pistols were given the bullet by a bunch of irate city fathers yesterday.

Councillors at Derby banned the Punk Rock group from a concert last night after they failed to turn up for a preview in the afternoon.

In return Johnny Rotten, the group's leader, stuck one finger up his nose and gave the town a V-sign as his coach pulled out.

Then he gave his verdict on the councillors behind the ban. "They're a load of daft old sods," he said.

All afternoon the city fathers had waited patiently in the town's King's Hall to hear the group and decide whether to allow them to play in the concert. And all afternoon the group sat defiantly munching chicken sandwiches in the Crest Hotel.

At 3 p.m. the fed-up councillors decided they had waited long enough.

Councillor Les Shepley, chairman of the leisure committee, told reporters: "It's off — all bloody off."

It was the tenth concert on the group's tour to be cancelled since their foul-mouthed TV performance on Wednesday.

Meanwhile Bill Grundy, the interviewer on the programme, was taking a fortnight's enforced rest from broadcasting.

He said grimly: "There are two particular four-letter words I object to at the moment—punk and rock."

BOOTNOTE: Officials of Manchester City football club have banned all further Sex Pistols advertisements from their match programmes after complaints about the one used yesterday for the match against Derby.
