

Punk rock shockers go broke

By IAN CAMERON

PUNK rockers the Sex Pistols were singing a worried song yesterday. The group who shocked the country with their four-letter interview on television came clean and admitted: "We're broke."

They have no money to pay rent on their homes, offices or rehearsal studios.

The band blamed their penniless plight on public reaction to the TV interview with Bill Grundy — and the giant EMI record company.

They have been banned in nine towns, and their nationwide tour is a flop.

Manager Malcolm McLaren claimed: "EMI have more or less said they won't advance us any more money."

But he promised that the five remaining concerts on the tour would go on — because hotels have already been paid for.
