one-time Cleopatra stayed in the background polishing her diamonds.

In a situation like that, if ever a man had reason to feel like the spare one at a wedding, it was

A FILM classification in Dallas, America, has a bright system of labelling films V for violence, S for sex, D for drugs, N for nudity and L for language (naughty, that is).

I suppose any film that gets a VSDNL is a box-office smash.

NOW the punk rock group Sex Pistols are grumbling that the public reaction to their TV interview with Bill Grundy has crippled what should have been a money-making nationwide tour and left them out in the cold.

Banned by many towns which didn't fancy risking a backlash as a result of their language in front of the cameras, the group bleat that they had expected their appearance would be a massive promotion job. But in fact it put the kybosh on their chances of fame and fortune.

Odd. Isn't it? If the group hadn't been given the opportunity to expose themselves so nastily on television—and Bill Grundy did say that was his intention—that talentless, foul-mouthed little lot might now be cussing around the country and coining it

A NAUGHTY thought crossed my mind when I read that Marlon Brando is to be paid a staggering £2,250,000 for 12 days' work to portray Superman's father in a super-duper Hollywood film about Superman.

Since that works out at £187,500 a day, I'd be tempted to pray for rain, snow, sleet, hurricanes and a whole series of breakdowns to hold up production and put me in the running for overtime at time and a half.
