Pistols — with guarantee

THE controversial "punk rock" group Sex Pistols, booked to appear at the Winter Gardens in Cleethorpes next Monday night, have given a guarantee about their behaviour.

The band hit the headlines a few days ago after a television interview with Bill Grundy in which their contribution to the dialogue is alleged to have included four-letter words.

The Sex Pistols have been described as exponents of the latest music cult which, in its extremes, aims at shocking the audience with the use of obscenities and language described by some as "rich" and by others as "blasphemous."

The group has ridden this wave of mixed publicity to embark on a nationwide tour which has brought them success at some performances but which has also seen them booed-off stage in Leeds and banned from places elsewhere.

The director - general manager of the Winter Gardens, Mr. Ian Galloway, told the Evening Telegraph today: "We have booked this group simply to give a musical performance of heavy rock.

"We have received a written guarantee from the promoters of this band that the conduct of the group will be in accordance with the accepted behaviour of a rock band in 1976.

"There will be no obscenities or anything the slightest bit suggestive on stage or during their visit. This whole thing about their performance has been exaggerated."

Two other rock bands will be appearing with Sex Pistols — a group from America called The Heartbreakers, and a new group, Clash.

Last week a rock group which plays in a similar vein, Eddie and the Hot Rods, was very well received at the Winter Gardens.

Mr. Galloway added: "This was a dance organised through the Grimsby College of Technology. The group was good and everyone enjoyed the performance."

Although councils elsewhere in the country have raised objections to this sort of music and Sex Pistols, the Mayor of Cleethorpes, Coun. Alan Green, said he thought there would not be much to worry about.
